TITLE OF PROJECT:

Time Period of Grant: Study of UC Berkeley Student Use of Facebook for Academic Purposes
Amount of Award Received: $4127.00
Original Abstract as Submitted:

The principle objective of this study is to investigate through survey, observation and interviews the potential role Facebook, the popular online social network, can play in the utilization of University Library resources and services by UC Berkeley students. The project will meet this objective by focusing on the degree to which students employ Facebook in their study habits and by investigating students' willingness to access library services and communicate with library personnel through Facebook. This study will attempt to replicate and build on the results of a research project conducted by Gelman Library staff at George Washington University.

A key component of this study is the examination of student attitudes towards formal academic presences (e.g., librarians, professors) on Facebook. In assessing student perceptions about the "appropriateness" of online social networks for existing or potential study purposes, this project will shed light on how students understand, employ, and react to the University Library's online presence. Ultimately, this study aims to incorporate its observations and insights into a consideration of how the University Library might better employ Facebook as a resource for improving student services. The study's findings will be presented in a report intended for publication.
